CANADIAN MINISTER ESCAPES TORPEDOED SHIP—HAS RELATIVES HERE

Bethel relatives and friends of Clarence D. Howe, Minister of Munitions and Supply of Canada, were pleased to learn last week that he was among the 152 survivors of the 10,000 ton ship, Western Prince, which was the victim of a German submarine on Dec. 14. Thanks to the advice of his wife who insisted on warm clothing in the event of disaster, Mr. Howe suffered no ill effects from the ordeals of escape and rescue.

Mr. Howe visited Bethel three years ago, the guest of his cousin at East Bethel, John Howe, and Robert and William Hastings. At that time he was Minister of Transportation. He is a native of Waltham, Mass.

Fire Threatens Tebbets Spool Mill Wednesday

Fire starting in the automatic lathe room of the E. L. Tebbets Spool Co. at Locke Mills resulted in a heavy damage, mostly from water, about 5:30 Wednesday afternoon. The automatic sprinkler system failed to quench the blaze entirely and the flames did some damage on the floor above. Sprinklers were also in action on the third floor. Fire departments of Bryant Pond and Bethel were called, and the Bethel firemen ran a line of hose from Alder River which finally controlled the fire.

The mill has been running day and night much of the time, but was not in operation yesterday on account of the holiday. It is expected that repair work will be completed so that mill work can be resumed the first of the week.

MAINE POTATO SEED TESTED IN FLORIDA

Over 200 samples of potatoes submitted by Maine growers that are being pretested on a 21 acre plot here are "just breaking through the ground," J. L. Scribner, southern representative of the Maine Department of Agriculture and the Maine Development Commission reported today.

The plot, financed by potato tax receipts, is used by Maine growers to test seed for disease prior to wholesale planting next year. Samples from various lots are grown and readings determine whether the whole lot will yield a disease-free crop or whether it should be withheld from planting altogether. The process has proved immensely valuable to Maine's potato growers.

Scribner said that first readings of the samples that are just peering through Florida soil would be taken this week.

He said that the season "was early" and that, at present, there is enough natural moisture present to insure good conditions although an irrigation system is ready for use if needed at any time.

Scribner reported a sharp drop in acreage planted to potatoes by Florida plants in the area this year saying that 7,200 acres were planted in 1939 as compared with 5,400 acres this year.

He predicted that the first of the Florida crop will be dug about February 20 if no setbacks occur.

Scribner reported that New Jersey and Long Island potatoes have disappeared from the Florida market.

Earthquakes Center In New England

Last Friday morning about 2:30 there was a severe earthquake accompanied by a loud roar or rumble. Very little damage was reported but the shaking was so violent that few slept through the disturbance which continued for a minute or more. The center of the quake was said to be in the vicinity of Ossipee, N. H., and it was felt from New Jersey to Canada.

A second shake-up occurred about 8:45 Tuesday morning. This visit was of a different variety from the Friday earthquake, with less noise and a more effective motion. Many articles were tumbled from shelves in homes and stores, and bricks dislodged from chimneys. This series of tremors centered in the region of Conway, N. H., where it is reported that the quake was such that it rang church bells.

Slight shocks were noticed Wednesday morning.

NUMBER OF SERVICE STATIONS GROWING AT DECREASING RATE

Number of service stations increased from 1935 to 1939 at less than one-third the rate of gain in the preceding five years, and at a little more than the percentage rise in number of registered motor vehicles, preliminary report from the first 18 states in the 1939 "Census of Business" indicate.

Sales by service stations are registering an exactly opposite trend, however, for in these first reporting states the 1935 to 1939 increase is more than twice as great as the 1929 to 1935 gain. The average service station, apparently, was a lot better off in 1939 than in 1935, despite the lower retail prices for gasoline which prevailed last year. Increased sales it is believed, represent the more widespread sales of tires, accessories and other merchandise by service stations.

Compared to all other retail business service station sales have made outstanding gains in the past decade. In 1929 sales by service stations in these 18 states amounted to but 46 per cent of all retail sales. This proportion increased to 7.7 per cent in 1935 and to 8.5 per cent in 1939.

Contrary to the general belief that the number of service stations is still rising at the rapid rate made necessary in the 1920 decade to catch up with the spectacular growth in number of motor vehicles, these preliminary reports indicate that the number of stations now is growing at a rate that closely parallels the gains in motor vehicle registrations and the construction of new roads. From 1929 to 1935 the number of stations increased 78 per cent, but from 1935 to 1939 the rate was only 23.5 per cent, or less than 5 per cent a year. It is probable that the total increase will be even smaller when all stations are included, since all of the large states are still unreported in the census figures.

Factors probably responsible for the large gains in number of stations in early years and for part of the reduced gains in the last five years are: building of new stations to serve new roads with no corresponding abandonment on old roads; a general abandonment rate believed to be much lower than that in most retail businesses, because through the depression the old, poorly-located station still offered the promise of some income, even though slight, to independent business men; and reclassification in which country general stores and other secondary outlets which always had a gasoline pump or two, in recent years have gained enough gasoline business, or lost enough other business, to define them as filling stations for the first time in the 1939 census.

PENSION BLOC IN CONGRESS ASKS $30 MONTHLY PAY TO AGED

(Reprint from Christian Science Monitor, November 23, 1940)
Washington, Nov. 23. A formidable congressional bloc advocating a flat Federal pension of $30 a month for all aged groups is in the making and is preparing to press new pension legislation.

A poll of 663 congressional candidates in the recent election, undertaken by the General Welfare Federation of America, nonpartisan advocate, shows that it can count on 265 new Congressmen as a central legislative nucleus.

The General Welfare Federation advocates what it considers a cautious and conservative pension and in interpreting the poll Arthur L. Johnson, its Executive Secretary, declared that the sentiment throughout the Nation is increasingly away from "Townsendism or any of the extreme proposals of the past."

"Only two of the many replies," Mr. Johnson said, "were from candidates who lost, indicated any interest whatever in unlimited spending of the taxpayers' money by the aged as a means of prosperity. The replies were based instead on the sounder grounds of justice and fair dealing and the necessity of meeting one of our own main domestic problems in a common sense and practical as well as humane manner."

The prime objective of the federation is to establish a national pension payable exclusively by the Federal Government and fixed at a uniform level of $30 a month. Wide Range in Payments.

The prevailing methods of old age assistance is that the Federal Government contributes to each person up to a combined total of $40. This sum is divided into 40 parts, it ranges from an average of $222 a month in Arkansas to an average of $270 in California.

While numerous influential advocates of a Federal pension were defeated for reelection, there is little evidence that their defeat was due to their pension advocacy and these averages to the pension movement were about evenly offset by the election of other friendly Congressmen.

Mr. Johnson contends that there is manifest "an increased sentiment toward pay-as-you-go annuity for all groups and all classes in the country."

The Federation felt that pension support also gained ground in the Senate where its battle has not been carried so far, due to the fact that revenue measures must originate in the House. It welcomes the fact that two of its most ardent supporters in the House, Abe Murdock (D) of Utah and Conrad C. Wallgren (D) of Washington have been promoted to the Senate.

In announcing the results of its poll, the Federation emphasized the fact that it received commendation for its fair attitude on pensions by the House Democratic leaders, including John W. McCormack, Majority Leader, Robert L. Doughton, Chairman of the powerful Ways and Means Committee, and Frank Crowther, a member of the same Committee.

The Federation also noted President Roosevelt's commitment on behalf of a more general national pension, made in his speech to the Transfers convention on Sept. 11, and felt that this would bring aid support to its 3 1/2 year battle to generalize pensions.

Its theory is that to make the benefits of the Social Security Act more generally available all should pay, during their producing years, a small annuity premium, in the form of a tax direct or indirect, for which they will receive a retirement annuity when they reach the age of retirement.

Household News

Celebrating the advent of a new year is excuse enough for a party in any crowd. Whether it's youngsters or the "oldsters" that gather to see the old year out, the new year in, the party must have plenty of novelty and "get-up-and-go"—new games, new music, new refreshments, too, and something to drink is a requirement!

Drink a toast to the new year with a piping hot punch; while the winds of winter howl and fling sheets of snow against the windows, a hot, tangy drink will cheer your guests.

"Hawaiian Hot Cup" is a drink that is new as the brand new year. Serve it steaming hot in small cups, with crisp crackers and wedges of cheese to accompany it.

Hot Spiced Cider and Holiday Mulled Grape Juice, served with Ginger Cookies or Doughnuts, make simple and satisfying refreshments for a crowd, and crisp, buttery popcorn or salted nuts are good to nibble on while the entertainment is under way.

Huge Bows

This evening ensemble is a black sheer crepe over black silk taffeta slip. The skirt is slit and edged with rose taffeta pleating. Its chief glory is the huge bow that trims the taffeta bodice of matching rose petal silk. This bow is so arranged it comes through a slit in the jacket. Watch bows! They are coming into their own on the newer dress fashions. It is also smart style to tie collarless coats with a huge taffeta bow at the throat.

FIRST-AID to the AILING HOUSE

By ROGER B. WHITMAN

(© Roger B. Whitman—WNU Service.)

QUESTION: How can buckle-berry stains be removed from clothing and linen?

Answer: Most fruit stains when fresh can be removed from cottons and linens by pouring boiling water through the stain from a height of three or four feet. The stained part of the fabric is stretched over a pail and tied in place; boiling water is then poured on it, and has sufficient force to take out the stain. Soap should not be used on a fruit stain, for it sets the color. If fabric stained with fruit juice has been laundered, removal is much more difficult. One method is to bleach with Javelle water, which, however, if not thoroughly rinsed out soon after using, may weaken the fabric. Follow directions on the label of the container. This chemical will also work with stains that are old and dried. Another method is to rub the stain with glycerine, to let it stand for some hours, and then to pour boiling water through the stain from a height. These methods are for cotton and linen. For stains on colored fabric, silk or wool, and for all valuable pieces, it is best to have the job done by a professional.

Copper Valleys.

QUESTION: I would like your advice as to the use of copper in the flashing of valleys and slate surfaced asphalt shingles. I have been told that a chemical reaction takes place at a point where the edge of the asphalt shingle contacts the copper, causing pinholes. Strips of the same material of which the asphalt shingles are made, have been recommended. The top strip is laid wider than the under strip. What is your opinion?

Answer: The chemical reaction you describe may take place when copper is used in connection with other types of shingles as well. However, if the flashing is installed according to directions, the results will be far more lasting than the method described above. Write to the Copper and Brass Research association at 420 Lexington Avenue, New York City, for complete instructions.

Heating Plant.

QUESTION: (same writer) What type of stove should I use for heating my house in the mountains? Wood is handy, and oil is easily procured.

Answer: If the house is compact in design and of open interior, and if the ceilings are not more than 15 inches above the top of the door openings, you would get satisfaction with a pipeless heater, to be put in the cellar, or a circulating hot air heater to go on the ground floor. Either one of these would be especially good if you plan to use the house only on week-ends and short visits. If you expect to live there permanently, you might do better to put in hot water or steam heat.

Old Boards.

QUESTION: Could boards on the walls of an old barn be used as under flooring, or possibly even for finished flooring? In the latter case, is it better to lay the flooring first, and then to use a machine sander, or to have them planed at the mill before laying?

Answer: Boards that are not warped, and that are sound, can be used again. If they are hardwood, they would make good finish floors. If they are fairly smooth, machine sanding after laying might be enough, but I should prefer to have them run through a planer at a mill.

Damp Closet.

QUESTION: What is the best medium to use in a clothes closet to absorb dampness?

Answer: One very simple method is the continuous burning of an electric light in the closet, the door of which is kept closed. The light should be placed on the floor, so that the heat will rise and circulate. For a closet of ordinary size, a 25-watt lamp is usually sufficient, but a larger lamp, of course, will furnish more heat.

HOW to SEW

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

ON HER way home from the club Mrs. Martindale was thinking, "It will be my turn next. What will they think when they come to our house?" Then she put her latch key into the lock and stepped into her own front hall. "Just what I was afraid of," she said aloud. "When you look at this hall as an outsider the worst thing you think is that its owner is lacking in imagination."

Right then things began to happen. The shabby old hall carpet was washed right on the floor and then dyed a deep green with hot dye applied with a scrub brush. The long lines of the new green sateen curtains turned the space between door and window into a definite panel crying for a long

Oatmeal on a dampened cloth will clean white paint.

To prevent rust in the stove oven, leave the door open for an hour after baking.

To make your popovers really pop over, be sure to have the baking pans well greased and very hot. The pans should "sizzle" when you quickly touch them with fingers dipped in cold water.

Freshen up stale loaves, buns or small cakes by brushing over with milk and putting into the oven to crisp again.

Salt meat requires longer boiling than fresh meat.

Rain spots can be removed from suede shoes by rubbing with fine emery board.

If the roof should leak and stain your ceiling, cover the stain with block magnesia. Rub the block over the spot until the stain is covered, then smooth over with the tips of your fingers. It works like magic.

Stubborn rust stains sometimes can be removed by boiling the article for 10 minutes in a quart of water containing two tablespoons of cream of tartar, then rinsing thoroughly in cold water.

HIGH PRICES Do Not Go WITH ADVERTISING

Advertising and high prices do not go together at all. They are extremely incompatible to each other. It is only the product which is unadvertised, which has no established market, that costs more than you can afford to pay.

Whenever you go into a store and buy an item of advertised merchandise, it doesn't make any difference what you are getting more for your money—more in quality and service—than you would get if you spent the same amount for something which was not advertised.

Mirror and a console shelf. The sketch shows you how these were made from next to nothing. The frames of the three inexpensive small mirrors were painted red before they were fastened together. The shelf was covered with cream colored monk's cloth to match the walls and woodwork and edged with cream color cotton fringe tacked on with large red tacks.

The method of making the buckram stiffened valance used for the curtains in this sketch is described fully in SEWING Book 5. This book contains thirty-two homemaking projects with step by step directions for each. Send order to:

SYNOPSIS

David Mallory, in search of newspaper work in New York, is forced to accept a job as switch-board operator in a swank apartment house, managed by officious Timothy Higgins. There David meets Miss Agatha Paget, a crippled old lady, and her charming niece, Allegra. One day, talking with Higgins in the lobby, David is alarmed by a piercing scream. David finds the scream came from the Ferriter apartment, not far from the Pagets'. The Ferriters include Lyon and Everett, and their sister, Ione. Everett, a genealogist, is helping Agatha Paget write a book about her blue-blooded ancestors. Inside the apartment they find a black-bearded man—dead. The police arrive. Higgins, who secretly dislikes David, informs him that he is fired. David is called to the Paget apartment. There he finds elderly, prim-appearing Agatha Paget sipping a cocktail. She offers him a job helping write her family history—which will unearth a few family skeletons. He accepts the offer. Meanwhile, police suspect Lyon Ferriter of the murder. Jerry Cochrane of the Press offers David a job helping solve the murder. David accepts. He is to keep on working for Miss Paget. Later David meets Grosvenor Paget, Allegra's brother. Then, that night, David sees Grosvenor prowling through the Ferriter apartment. David confronts Grosvenor with the story. He is told to mind his own business.

"Isn't it nice," the girl asked, and I thought her faintness was forced, "that after all the family skeletons, Mr. Mallory will drink with you, Agatha?"

"Bahl!" said Miss Agatha and reached for the untouched tankard, "David is—"

"Just," I said as she paused, "an elevator man coming up in the world."

The wrinkles came about her eyelids. She chuckled.

"That isn't what I was going to say. Since you are in New York and your people are in Nebraska, you may have more use for families as institutions than I have. Distance makes relations more endurable to one another. Of course the republic is founded on the American home—"

"There she goes," Allegra said in a loud aside to her brother.

"The family is the foundation of the nation," the old lady went on, "and I wonder if that isn't the trouble with things. I believe—"

The peal of the doorbell cut her short. Grosvenor rose to answer it.

"Dama," said Miss Agatha. "If it's that man Shannon again—"

It was Lyon Ferriter. I admired Miss Paget's tolerance.

"Well," she said warmly, as though a wash had been answered. "Come in and revel. Groves, no other tannard."

Lyon chuckled the lad and smiled. His eyes, looking away from face to face, rested on mine an instant and once more seemed puzzled.

"Thanks," he said and bowed to Miss Agatha. "I am afraid I have intruded, but they said upstairs that you had just returned. I came, with Captain Shannon's permission, to get some things from my flat and I wanted to thank you all of you for your prompt service. There's an old word to use in New York, but I can think of no better. You were very good to my sister, Miss Paget," he added more softly. "I don't forget it. You've kept your head better than any of us, during these unprosperous times."

"My dear boy," Miss Agatha said softly. "When you're looking as I am, a mere murder count is hardly a crime. And I am—"

"I'll tell you," Lyon said in the tender tone that always came when he was about to say something. "The Pagets are hardly a refuge. The Paget men have found out since we were making a police man's life is not a happy one."

"My dear boy," Miss Agatha said softly. "When you're looking as I am, a mere murder count is hardly a crime. And I am—"

"I'll tell you," Lyon said in the tender tone that always came when he was about to say something. "The Pagets are hardly a refuge. The Paget men have found out since we were making a police man's life is not a happy one."

He stood in the doorway, a brown, worn and pleasant figure, and spread his hands.

I said to Miss Agatha: "It's time I went—or several hours after time."

"If," she answered and her eyes were merry, "you can stir that—that decoration there"—she nodded toward Grosvenor—"to an interest in fencing or any exercise, stay longer."

As I turned toward the door, Lyon's exclamation halted me. "Fencing," he repeated. "Oh, by George, I know you now. Your face has bothered me for days. I saw you in Chicago."

"If you did," I told him, "you saw me get trimmed."

"By D'Arnhallac," he said as if that excused anything. "You know," he told the others, "this lad really is good."

"Was good," I corrected. "That was two years ago." I was glad he fortified the hasty lie I had told to cover Grosvenor. Lyon ran on like a boy:

"I use the sword a little myself. Sometime, I'd like to show you my collection of blades. Some of them are rather good."

I almost told him I had seen them. Then I remembered the dead man who had lain before them, and didn't. I gave Miss Agatha my new address and left them talking as easily as though the last thirty-odd hours never had happened.

The events of the final sixty minutes had scrambled my mind. They had kicked over what theories I had built and now memory of Allegra, loyal and valiant and fearful, fought against the erection of new. I was half-way to the corner before I remembered my suitcase still in Higgins' basement flat. Here was something definite to do, an anodyne to bewilderment. I faced about and went back to the Morello.

The light was out before the basement door and the hallway beyond was dark. I thought that Higgins might be asleep. That stopped me for a moment. Asleep or awake, I decided, there would be a squabble and I might as well face it now. I closed the door, felt for a match and, finding none, went along the black hall.

My fingers touched the white-washed stone, once, twice. They reached out a third time and recoiled. They had brushed rough cloth and underneath that was a body, pressed tight and still against the wall.

For a second, neither of us moved, or breathed. Then I lurched forward, arms spread wide. My hands grazed the harsh fabric but found no hold. Something tripped me. I went down. A foot stamped on my knuckles. I grabbed for it and missed, but its owner fell too, with a thud and a gasp and a flat chime of metal on stone. I leaped up to stumble once more over the thing that first had tripped me. I fell again, this time upon it. An angle smote me in the midriff, driving out my breath. I heard the quick sound of retreating feet. I saw, as I got to my knees, the outer door open and a dim figure that fled. Then I squatted, blinking in a blaze of light.

CHAPTER VII

I could see nothing but that glare. It hurt my eyes. I knew dimly that my hand and my cramped hand were I squatted, half up, half down for a long instant. The dazzling light thinned and Higgins' red face came through.

"What he does and I thought he should be all this noise!" I said. "I was trapped," I said.

Higgins chuckled.

"So ye was tripped," he jeered. "Now ain't that too bad? The someone that tripped ye lays beside ye, me lad."

I looked down. The obstacle over which I had twice fallen was my own suitcase. Higgins, in a last flare of spite, had left it in the hall.

"Who else," I asked, "was in here?" The superintendent chuckled and anger helped me get hold of myself.

"Who else?" he echoed. "Nobody, ye fool, but yourself and your clumsy feet."

Higgins locked the door behind me. I stumbled up the steps. The wind stung my face. Its blast seemed to scatter my mind. Someone had been in that basement hallway when I had entered—someone who feared to be found there, who had fought off my clumsy effort at capture. I had touched, I had heard the intruder. He had left his heel-mark on a bleeding knuckle. Suspicion that had pointed first to Lyon Ferriter, that had centered on Grosvenor Paget, swung wildly about now like a weathervane in a whirlwind. I had left both men upstairs. The dim figure I had seen dart through the doorway had seemed slighter than either. It could not have been the buxom Everett.

Suddenly, I wanted to confide in someone. It was the lonely wretchedness of the overburdened. I thought, as I slipped at my dusty overcoat and trousers, of Shannon, of Miss Agatha, of Allegra, and each time found at once good reason why I could not go to them. As I picked up my suitcase, an amused voice asked behind me:

"Ever try a whiskbroom, accomplice? You can buy them at all the better stores."

Jerry Cochrane's coat collar was turned up about his ears. His round face had been spanked red by cold and wind had watered his canny eyes. He was sane flesh and blood. I was glad to see him.

"What's this?" he asked, nodding at my suitcase. "The body?"

He was medicine for the fitters. At my question he gave a gesture, half shrug, half shiver.

"I trailed Lyon Ferriter from the Babylon," he said. "Your hall force wouldn't let me wait in the vestibule. I was across the street when I saw you go down the cellar. So when you came out, I—"

I grabbed his arm so hard that he stepped and stared. I had trouble getting hold of words.

"Who came out ahead of you?" he repeated, wide-eyed. "Out of the cellar? Nobody."

"I groaned. 'If you'd only watched,' I began, but he cut me short."

"Listen," he bade. "I didn't have anything else to do, except freeze. No one came out of the basement except you. What's all the heat—"

"Save it," I told him and ran toward the Morello. My suitcase battered my legs. I swore at it and myself. If Cochrane were not mistaken, if the intruder who fled had not gone up to the street, he had lurked in the area by the stairs until after I had left. He might still be hiding in that black pit.

Beyond the Morello, a taxi swung into the curb. Someone entered it. The door slammed and it slid away. We were too far off to see the license number or even the passenger clearly.

"Sometime," Cochrane asked politely, "when you're not quite so active, you'll let me in on this?"

I told him, as well as I could, for I was winded, what had happened. "Who was it?" Cochrane queried. "I think," I answered, "it was Mr. Addison Sims of Seattle."

The wind boomed in the area while we talked in hushed voices. It struck my sweating face like the gust of a cold shower bath. Cochrane was panting, yet he shivered.

"Lyon?" he asked. I wondered why it should have been his first thought, as well as mine.

"Lyon Ferriter," I answered, "is upstairs—in Miss Paget's apartment. He couldn't have got down here ahead of me."

"Unless he took the hidden way the murderer traveled," Cochrane pointed out stubbornly, and his teeth chattered. "I'd like to know where he is, this minute."

I turned toward the steps and said:

"I can go back and find out if he's still upstairs."

"I'd like to know," Cochrane repeated in a cold-shaken voice, as he followed me upward. "If I'm going to live to understand all this, I've got to get a taxi and a drink fast. Find out if Ferriter is still upstairs and then—"

But we had no need for search. As I came out of the area, a lean figure left the Morello vestibule. Shoulders hunched against the wind,

I saw, as I got to my knees, the outer door open and a dim figure that fled.

Lyon Ferriter strode past us. I thought he recognized me, for he looked hard and seemed about to check his pace and then pressed on. We watched him to the corner.

"Anyone," Cochrane gasped through his rattling teeth, "who can go without an overcoat on a night like this is a murderer or a suicide. Hi, taxi!"

As we bounced along toward the address he gave, his questions prodded me once again through the story of my struggle in the basement.

"It doesn't make sense," he complained. "Maybe it was someone colder than me, even—some Forgotten Man ducking in out of the wind."

"He wasn't too numb to move fast," I reminded him. "And why should he hang out in the area after I'd flushed him, unless there still was something in the basement that he needed?"

"True," Cochrane said. "Perhaps he wanted to get his watch, or whatever you heard drop."

"I heard it drop," I told him, "but it wasn't there. I looked."

"It was, but it wasn't," he said bitterly. "And there you have the case in a few words, accomplished. I'm sorry we hired you. You keep messing up the puzzle. I owe you one, though, for your tip on the Babylon. I don't know who was sorer—Shannon or the Ferriters—when I ran 'em down."

The cab's brakes squealed. Cochrane thrust open its door.

"The Artists and Writers," he said, "and just in time to save one very precious life."

He led me down a crooked hall to an iron door with a wicket and rang the bell.

"A newspaper hangout," he explained. "It masqueraded as a restaurant during prohibition. Now it poses as a speakeasy. Newspaper men are rampant."

"That's because," I told him, "they meet so many interesting people."

"Gene," Cochrane bade the face that appeared at the wicket, "two hot Scotchies, quick, and I'll close the door myself."

Cochrane was sipping his second drink and talking in a low voice. Blackbeard's body lay in the morgue, still unidentified. The Ferriters had been easier to trail. Lyon and his sister had been in Alaska where he had run a combined saloon and store on the Tanana River.

"A year ago," Cochrane went on, "it seems Ione and Lyon and a new-comer, a guy named Horstman, went prospecting, and were out all winter. They found gold, but Horstman got lost in a blizzard and his body never was recovered. Lyon sold his claim and came to New York. He's comfortably fixed. His sister doesn't do anything, either. And right now, she doesn't look as if it agreed with her."

He made a design of wet rings on the table with the bottom of his glass and asked, still watching them,

"Do you know anything of a tie-up between the Paget boy and Ione?"

"Why?" I stalled and my voice must have been sharp, for he grinned.

"You and I," said Cochrane, "have the same sort of dirty mind. The idea may lead nowhere, but the lad comes into an inheritance in a few days now—three million or thereabouts, which is no small sum to shoot at, even in inflated currency. Ione—"

He broke off. A man came, walking stiffly, from the barroom. He said, "Hi, Jerry," to Cochrane, started to pass on and then stopped, staring at me. It was Duke of the Sphere. I found myself disliking him again.

"Hello, Larry," Cochrane said and his face was guileless. "Have a drink?"

"Thanks," Duke answered. "I've had mine."

He had. He swayed as he spoke and kept on looking at me. We watched each other like hostile dogs. Cochrane said quietly:

"This is David Mallory. He—"

"We've met before," I broke in.

Duke sat down with a long sigh. Drink had turned him pale and sweating. I knew he was trouble-hunting and felt my own temper rise to meet his. He asked carefully, for his tongue was thick:

"Private conspiracy, or can I horn in?"

Cochrane grinned.

"I knew Dave in Omaha," he said so smoothly that the lie sounded like truth. "I've been trying to pump him. Help yourself."

"Thanks," Duke replied and looked at me briefly. "Turned in your copy, Jerry?"

"Still trying to find something to write about."

Duke mopped his glistening face. "You had no trouble yesterday. Why don't you let your stool loose on young Paget's affair with Ione?"

Cochrane glanced at me and I held fast to myself. He said easily, just one of Shannon's "theories," "There's nothing in it."

"Isn't there?" Duke asked. "The reason this thing is locked up so tight is because the Pagets are in it up to their necks. The Pagets are people in this town. They've got the immunity of cash and position. If we could tear the lid off this thing, we'd find a Grove-Ione tie-up and probably Allegra mixed up in it."

I got up.

"I hope," Duke said, fumbling with his words, "that I'm not offending you."

I said to Cochrane:

"I don't care for your friend's manners, or his mind or his smell. Unless he cares to argue it, I'll be on my way."

Duke lurched and tried to rise but Cochrane threw himself sideways and held him down.

"Easy, Larry," he soothed, "you're drunk," and to me, "Make it fast."

I obeyed. He overtook me at the Broadway corner.

"Young Lochinvar!" he said, panting.

Youth Must Be Gay

By Katherine Edelman

"ISN'T this the most exciting event?" Marjorie Hanson's blue eyes were shining as she spoke. "Imagine your Uncle Warren giving such a party. The pieces just don't fit together."

There was ample reason for Marjorie's bewilderment. Until tonight there was not a single thing to show that Warren Brownlee had anything but criticism for the younger generation. He had been unrelentingly severe in his judgments of even the most simple pleasures. Now, to the astonishment of all who knew him, he had thrown the big house open for a New Year's party. Its gloomy rooms were changed into connecting halls of gaiety and laughter.

Everything was there to make the occasion merry. Horns, whistles, balloons, silly caps, streamers and confetti. It seemed as if Uncle Warren had gone all the way; nothing was lacking to make a successful New Year party. And most amazing thing of all, Warren Crane's usually grim face was wreathed in smiles. He seemed to be enjoying everything like a schoolboy.

"It's the most puzzling thing," Marjorie repeated again.

She was sitting out a dance with Douglas Crane. Doug had lived with his uncle since his parents died. Now, he was doing secretarial work and helping with the estate. He should know all the whys and wherefores of everything. But Doug professed complete ignorance. "He just started making mad preparations after he came back from the city. Wanted everything made ready for a real party. But he hasn't told me a word. I'm as much in the dark as you are, Marjorie."

They were silent for a moment. Doug pressed Marjorie's hand tightly. "I'm afraid that tomorrow he'll change back into Uncle Grouch," he said; "I just can't remember Uncle Warren ever really smiling before."

But—but let's talk about ourselves. You know how I love you, darling. I—I don't care if Uncle is opposed to young people getting married. I'm going to tell him the truth tomorrow. I don't care if—"

"So you don't care, eh? You're willing to defy me?" Uncle Warren was standing beside them in a threatening attitude. In the shadowed terrace they were unable to see the twinkling gleam in his eyes.

"Well, it's the only thing we can do," Doug answered hotly. "You—" you're so hard about everything, we have to defy you, since you put it that way."

"You won't have to, Douglas." Uncle Warren had come closer and placed an arm on each of their shoulders. "You can marry Marjorie just as soon as you want to—"

"But, we don't understand," Doug gasped. "Why, only a week ago you said—"

"I'M FORGETTING everything I said about young people," Uncle Warren admitted. "I was wrong, terribly wrong in my judgments. . . . While I was in the city I ran into a strange experience—too long to go into the story just now—but I found out that youth must be gay, that it must have fun and laughter to be normal. And that the best place it could have this fun was in the atmosphere of home. That's why I gave this party."

Two pairs of arms were around him before he had finished. Doug and Marjorie were telling him in one voice how wonderful he was, and how happy he had made them.

Uncle Warren pulled loose from their grasp. "Come along, young folks," he shouted gayly. "I've been trying to think of something as a climax to this party. I've found the very thing. It's just two minutes to midnight, and I'm going to announce your engagement before they begin yelling, HAPPY NEW YEAR."

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1940

With Christmas behind us, with the shortest days here and 1941 nearly ready to leave us, it is only fitting that time be taken for a brief appraisal in fact, whether we like it or not, we find ourselves giving 1940 a critical check-up, which should give occasional suggestions for our better behavior in the coming year.

Realizing that low aim in plotting ones course is criminal, still there seems little sense in aiming so high in 1941 that our efforts must fall to the ground far short of the target. So in these few days that we still hold of the old year, an inventory of the 12 months' achievement is necessary in order to judge our strength, if we are to plan intelligently.

All this is the business and duty of the individual. And if each person succeeds in arriving at a fair valuation of his accomplishment and capacity, he has gone far toward setting a fair gauge of his ability in the near future.

As the success of the individual and the community are mutual, the importance of this self-inventory of the more striking. In reviewing this passing year, let us not overlook our part in community life, welfare, and improvement. The past year has not been bad, but with the concerted efforts of more of us, much more can be gained.

MY TRIP TO THE NATIONAL 4-H CONGRESS IN CHICAGO

The New England delegates, consisting of twenty girls and three boys other than myself, and five 4-H club agents, got underway Friday, November 29, for the Congress. That evening we took a radio and television tour of the R. C. A. Building, New York City. The next day, a grand November Saturday, was spent in Washington. The day was spent by taking many sight-seeing tours and the touring of many of the famous buildings.

The rest of the week, until Thursday, was spent at the Congress in the windy city. There we were treated in royalty; we lived in fine hotels, were fed the best of food, especially meats, possibly it was 4-H baby beef. Here we saw the best in entertainment and were given many souvenirs.

While at the Congress, the greatest thing that helped get people acquainted from different states was that of languages. The "Northern Brogue" and the "Southern Drawl" were the most talked of subjects on the entire trip.

I was honored by being elected to represent the State of Maine in the Democracy discussion group. That discussion group included a boy and girl from each state. We spent an hour discussing the subject "4-H Clubs and National Defense." I was very impressive to get the viewpoints of the other parts of our great country on questions so vital to our democracy.

The entire week was filled to the brim with sightseeing, traveling, fun and education, and is a never to be forgotten experience to me, as it is for the other delegates attending.

G. WILLIAM HERSEY, North Waterford, Maine Rural Electrification Delegate to the National 4-H Congress.

For every ten men employed in making steel, about five are kept at work supplying raw materials.

If the type of equipment available in 1910 were used today to handle the electric lights used by Americans, it is estimated that it would cost as much as fifteen billion dollars more to produce that light.

A TRUE STORY FROM OVERSEAS

He was not used to speaking in public. But as Owen Jenkins, machinist in the Royal dockyards at Portsmouth, rose to address that little group of men assembled to decide whether 500,000 British engineers should walk out of their jobs in shipyards and arms plants for the sake of more money, he was not afraid.

There had been talk of the possibility of a strike for days now and Owen Jenkins had lain awake nights thinking of his two sons. One was with the R. A. F. in Greece, the other—somewhere on the North Seas—both of them risking their lives every moment of the day and night for the sake of their country. And the men in his Union who were essential in the production of munitions his sons were using were threatening to quit their jobs for the sake of a few bob a week? It was all wrong... he knew... the kind of thing that would encourage the enemy and demoralize the country itself as well as hold up needed production.

There had been a number of speeches before his turn came. Men who pounded on the table and said now was the time for the working man to get what was coming to him! Now was the time when no one would dare to stand against them! And then, Owen Jenkins rose. He didn't talk very long... He spoke very quietly but what he said came from his heart. He told them of his two boys whom he had hoped would never have to go to any war. But they had been gone for months now. "When they come home again... as please God they may... What could I say to them if I stopped working now while they are fighting? Is a few bob all that matters in this world?... And then, "Are we prepared to supply the enemy commentators with proof for the outside world that the engineers of Britain want to strike?"

They heard him out and at the end there was a deep rumble of sympathetic applause. Jack Tanner, also of the Amalgamated Engineering Union, endorsed Jenkins' work, asking "Are we at this critical time to withdraw our work when defenses are needed and when our members and our families need defense?"

So the strike was voted down and the work being done by those 500,000 skilled men continued and England was that much stronger because one man realized that the workmen of a nation in a modern war play as vital a part in Defense as the armed forces—that it is as necessary for industry to carry on as it is for the Navy to send its ship to sea or the Air Force to fly its fighting planes!

De Shon, Rev. James MacKillop had charge of the decoration.

The D. of U. met at the home of Mrs. Inez Whitman Friday evening, Dec. 20th, at a special meeting. After the business was transacted, the following program was enjoyed: Hymn, "O Little Town of Bethlehem," and Christmas poem. Mrs. Inez Whitman.

A small Christmas tree placed on a table and surrounded with packages brought forth a gift for every member present. Refreshments of pop corn and candy were served.

Mrs. Verna Swan and daughter, Arlene, Mrs. Inez Whitman and daughters, Edith and Clara Whitman were in Lewiston Saturday afternoon.

The Christmas tree in the primary room was entirely trimmed with decorations made by the pupils.

In the grammar room the prize for the simplified spelling match was won by Marilyn Noyes. Some of the accepted spelling would have horrified many people.

Other games were enjoyed and then the presents and candy bags were distributed.

Dykstra Plans Aid to Conscripts Released After Year of Training

Draft Head Strives to Provide for Their Re-employment; Future of Military Training Program Depends Upon Its Effect on First Draftees.

By BAUKHAGE

(National Farm and Home Hour Commentator)

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)
The time will soon be over when the boys who wanted to get into the army will be the only ones called—the volunteers for the draft are rapidly being used up. Then it will be the turn of those who have to go whether they want to or not. But Washington isn't worrying about how this last contingent is feeling. What it is worrying about—or at least thinking about—is how the whole "new army"—all the boys who do their one year's hitch—are going to feel when they get out. That is one of the most important things that Uncle Sam has to consider in connection with the entire selective service system and that is why C. A. Dykstra was called to be selective service administrator.

When I sat down in his new office in Washington—which a month ago was the dining room of a flat in an apartment house the war department has hastily made over—Mr. Dykstra didn't look any different from the way he did when we sat down for a bull session in the fraternity house back in 1908. He has the same warm, overflowing nature and his face is still its window.

After we'd exchanged a few reminiscences, I said that I supposed he had been chosen to head up the draft chiefly because, as president of a great university, he stood for youth. He said he supposed so. Then I asked: "But what are you really here for? This selective service system runs itself, what are you supposed to worry about?" Then, we got to the real meat of the nut.

"The thing we are concerned with," he answered with that dash of ginger that spices his scholarly thoughtfulness and makes everything Dykstra does, live, "the thing that we are concerned with is what is going to happen next year."

I realized he was way ahead of me. "We have the continuing responsibility of training a citizen army"—and he emphasized the word "continuing."

"We have to ask ourselves how the boys who have finished a year's training are going to report back home. Will their report be such that their parents and their friends will say 'it was a good year'?"

Training Should Improve Conscripts

"We want the boy to report that he is physically better off; that his morale is strengthened; that he has seen and learned a lot about the country and is convinced that we have something to defend.

"We want him to be advanced in his education, the kind of education you get living with others; we want him to get a feeling for the whole population; to find out how the Texan looks at things and the boy from the great Northwest; the fellows from across the tracks and on the hill, the country boy and the one from the crowded city.

"We want the boys to learn from talking to each other about all kinds of things; have them learn the defense point of view; to understand and feel their whole country.

"We have to be interested in what happens this year if we are going to look ahead.

"Upon the boy's report will depend what happens on the floor of congress later. Maybe congress will decide that perhaps the boys should be allowed to get into the army a little younger. Perhaps they should have a wider period of option. Some might want to do their service as soon as they are through high school. Some might like to postpone it until they have gone through college.

"And then there is another thing. Congress may feel that perhaps this service should be extended to other fields so that other boys who can't get into the army can get the wider view, too, by getting into some kind of civilian service—build themselves up physically with work in the fields or the forests, fighting pests."

Looks Far Ahead To End of Service

As we talked it was easy to see how much further than the parade ground and the hike, the drill regulations and the rifle range, Administrator Dykstra was looking. Originally he studied to be a professor of history but he switched to political science, partly because of the influence of that great scholar, Charles Merriam, under whom he studied. Political science, the study of things that make the wheels of government go round, helped to pull him away from the campus and the library and into an active role in civic administration. He was finally called back into the college world again. After seven years as city manager of Cincinnati, where he made a splendid record, carrying that busy city through the terror of the flood of three years ago, he was made president of the University of Wisconsin.

Burning the Yule Log

Before that, he was head of the water and power department of the city of Los Angeles through the period of the building of the Boulder dam when the frightened farmers fought with guns and dynamite the new project which they thought would rob them of their water.

And another thing which he is thinking about when he says "next year" is the job situation and the part the government must play in fitting the trainee back into civilian life.

A part of the function of the selective service system is to see that the boy has a job when he ends his year of service. If the job he left is still there when he gets back, the selective service system will see that he gets it. But some firms may go out of business—then the United States employment service will play its part. The administrator explained it this way:

"The employer will want the man who has had a year in the army because he'll be healthier, better disciplined and he'll have learned to live with his fellows. But if the job isn't there, we'll have to find another one.

"Then there are the boys who didn't have a job when they went into the army. We will have to help local organizations working with business to take care of him."

Students Change Attitude on Draft

I wanted to know how the boys themselves felt about serving. I knew he knew the content of thousands of letters which have poured into selective service headquarters.

But he went back further than the letters for the beginning of his answer.

"Last summer," he said, "on the university campus I noticed the change in the attitude of the students. The questions they asked had lost their cynical flavor, their pessimistic approach to the subject of any military service which was characteristic of recent years. For a long time they had been under the influence of 'Committees Against War' and other similar organizations, which advanced abstract arguments. But by the time the selective service bill got under discussion, they had something concrete to talk about.

"The reversal of the British attitude of appeasement after Munich affected them. Then the fall of France; and there was the realization of what had actually happened to the occupied countries."

I wondered if it wasn't an emotional sweep that affected the country, a patriotic war-spirit. Dykstra didn't think so.

"The questions the students asked showed that they had been considering facts. And I think that is true generally. The daily happenings have made the people realize that defense is necessary, that they want to be part of that defense. They have begun to realize that 'it can happen here.'"

Deceased Congressmen

In the two-year period since the 1938 election, which determined the membership of the Seventy-sixth congress, 34 of the nation's legislators have died. The recent death of Sen. Key Pittman of Nevada brought to six the number of deaths in the senate in the last two years, says Pathfinder. The five other senators who died were J. Hamilton Lewis of Illinois, M. M. Logan of Kentucky, William E. Borah of Idaho, Ernest V. Gibson of Vermont and Ernest Lundeen of Minnesota, killed in an airplane accident. During the same period the house of representatives lost 28 of its members.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than fifty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor.

DEBACLE: Italian Version

Unquestioned was the fact that Italy had been kicked wholeheartedly out of the war by Britain, Greece and the Free French, together with other sundry allies such as Polish, Czech and other hands that had joined into the Battle of Greece and the Battle of Egypt.

The invader, who stepped briskly into the war just at the moment of France's collapse, shot forces along the Mediterranean coast from the border of Libya to Sidi Barrani, and who sailed across mountains for Athens from an Albanian take-off, had become the invader on both fronts.

Persistent rumors current in Europe say that Bruno Mussolini (above), eldest son of Il Duce, was shot down and killed during an air raid on Salonika, Greece. Official Italian circles have denied this report and say he is serving at an airport in southern Italy.

As the British and Greeks summed up huge supplies of war materials captured, and enormous inventories of prisoners in hand and still coming in, the Vesuvian rumbles began sounding through various parts of Italy, but more particularly in the north, and about the industrial cities of Turin and Milan.

Despite all efforts of censorship to keep the true situation from becoming generally known, the debacle was too enormous to be hidden longer, and Mussolini's aides had to take to the radio and to the Italian press to prevent a spread of the disaster to home fronts.

Dismissal of leaders, disaffection in the Dodecanese Islands, riots in the streets of the two big factory towns had leaked out, and then the Fascist party line editors and commentators began dishing out orders to the populace from the higher-ups, at the same time issuing warnings to Britain and the Hellenes as to what they might expect from the Italian troops when "they get really mad."

While there was some news of sporadic increased resistance at certain points in the fronts, the general words were two—retreat and evacuation all along the line. And the press' articles about the might of the British enemy and the "unfair" bayonets of the Greeks were just a foretaste of what was to come, with Tirana full of wounded and dying soldiers back from the front lines.

UNREST:

French Version

Britain was getting little comfort, according to her own sources, from France's governmental upheaval which sent Pierre Laval, pro-Fascist foreign minister, flying out of the Petain cabinet presumably into confinement, and put Flandin, pro-Nazi, into his place.

In fact, British circles frankly doubted the authenticity of any internal disturbance to amount to anything, and laid the whole change to orders direct from Hitler.

However, it was a notable occurrence, and accompanied by a scurrying about the streets of Vichy, and presumably Paris of a body of GPM—France's new Gestapo or GPU. In Italy they were calling them "action squads," but they are all the same sort of strong-arm governmental police.

France called them "Groupe de protection," hence the GP on the arm-band. It was a GP band that took Laval into custody, thus putting into at least a momentary decline the man on whose shoulders rested considerable of the onus of France's surrender.

Rumor floated double-barreled around the French overturn. Rumor No. 1 had it that Old Man Petain, realizing that revolt was stirring beneath him, charged Laval with plotting to get France into the war against England, and had summarily ousted him.

Rumor No. 2 was to the effect that Laval had plotted to overthrow Petain and create a new government with himself as dictator. Whichever might be true, watchers agreed that the aged general acted with much the same speed as the younger Hitler in slapping down a "purge" which shot Laval's feet from under him with dispatch.

The upheaval met the same view in most circles, that it was another evidence of the general European unrest that was moving through all the conquered territories, an unrest that might find no directional force for a long, long time.

SIX DAYS: Shalt Thou Labor

Pointing toward the six-day, perhaps seven-day week in defense industry, Defense Council Chairman Knudsen belabored American industry for lagging, and declared the United States was "not getting the spirit" of defense work.

Knudsen told the manufacturers many things, but one of these was outstanding, and had to do with airplane manufacture.

U. S. goal, declared Knudsen, had been 1,000 warplanes a month by January 1. He said at the rate things were going, we'll be lucky if we are getting 650 a month by that time.

The reason for the lag is lack of comprehension by manufacturer, by laborer, of the meaning of the national defense program. U. S. is supposed to be getting ready to protect the nation in case of aggression and to help England hold things in status quo until that time.

Knudsen pulled no punches and told the manufacturers that they were spending too much time figuring what to do with their profits and earnings, and not enough getting out the material. This was a double-barreled blow at the employers for temporizing with employees' demands for higher pay, and with employees for threatening and carrying out strikes.

WILLIAM KNUDSEN—Pictured as he urged a "warlike basis" for industry to speed production of vital defense needs.

He introduced the longer work-week idea by stating that employers should find a way to use machines on Saturdays and Sundays, making the obvious point that use of these two days on a full-time schedule would automatically speed up production about 30 per cent, or the amount it is lagging.

In advance he answered the manufacturers' complaint that they lacked the trained men to do this. Knudsen told them to get more men and train more men. He told them to "stagger" their trained men through the extra shifts, thus swiftly training the less-able to catch up to full-time production.

His address to the manufacturers was an air-cleaver, like the first lightning flashes before a storm that he hopes will rain airplanes and other defense material.

PRESIDENT:

And Flying Duke

President Roosevelt returned to his White House desk to face tremendous problems, behind him a 4,000-mile trip on U. S. S. Tuscaloosa which was shrouded in secrecy before it began, turned out just what had been predicted—a junket throughout prospective naval-air bases in the Antilles—and wound up in a blaze of front-page articles when the duke of Windsor flew out to sea to confer with the Chief Executive.

It all began when Duchess Wallis, who had to have an infected tooth out (translated in royal language into a "major dental operation") decided to have the surgery performed in a Miami hospital. She and the duke went thither in the yacht of a Swedish friend who oddly was a pal of Goering's.

The day after the death of Lord Lothian, the operation was safely over, with the duchess convalescing bewitchingly, and the duke with a considerable amount of time on his hands. Suddenly it was announced that President Roosevelt wanted to talk to him.

A navy bomber soared down onto the blue Biscayne waters, a motorboat met the duke, and off he went, shrouded with more secrecy than the President himself had been when he started out. He was back the same day, and the next day the Tuscaloosa came in and the cruise was over.

The public, prepared by all this for something monumental, had to satisfy itself with the story that the duke and the President had talked about the unsuitability of pint-sized Mayaguana island for a naval-air base, and asking the duke if he couldn't arrange a better one. It was the biggest anticlimax in months.

LOTHIAN:

Predicts, Then Dies

The notable, blunt-spoken British bachelor Marquess of Lothian, ambassador from Britain to the United States, lay dying in his Washington home from uremic poisoning at the very moment when his written words, spoken by proxy at nearby Baltimore, were predicting what the war in Europe will be.

Lothian's "deathbed" prediction was that Britain, with the help already promised and under way from America, will win the war "decisively" in 1942.

Whatever the facts may be, the shocking news of his death gave his final utterance unusual prominence in the news, editors tearing their hair over the problem of whether to put the largest headlines on what had happened to Lothian, or on what Lothian had said.

His passing was the occasion for the press here and abroad to express genuine sorrow and shock at his untimely death, and his loss was believed to have left a gaping hole in Britain's diplomatic body.

Lothian was a worker, his speech was brusque, and these two qualities alone had given him great weight in Washington.

As to his prediction of the end of the war in 1942, and with Britain victor, it was met with keen interest and perhaps added power because it was to all practical purposes, his dying utterance.

CITY:

Anxious

Strangest public health story in years "broke" in Rochester, N. Y., with a whole city of 300,000 souls rushing to be inoculated against typhoid.

First in sharp sequence of dramatic events was the "firing" of two city officials when a public health officer, "on his toes," discovered the city's water supply had been contaminated with water from the Genesee river, infested with sewage.

Rochester's population, most of them modern health conscious, rushed to have themselves inoculated against typhoid, a job which takes three injections with an interval between.

First day, the health officers distributed 8,000 "shots" of the serum, which were promptly gobbled up by private physicians and shot into 8,000 anxious arms.

In addition, another 1,100 dashed into the public clinics and took what they could get there. From nearby cities, in fast trucks, were rushed sufficient supply for the second day, enough to immunize 30,000 more persons.

Health officers were looking for the entire population to take the "shots" and were combing the country for enough of the prophylactic material to give to 300,000 persons—three doses each at intervals.

The entire episode presented one of the most unusual spectacles in any American city in history, and was certain to be studied and reported on for months to come in medical and public health journals.

It developed that somebody, somewhere, had turned the wrong valve the wrong way, and the river water got into the drinking supply.

LATE:

Guard's New Day

Delay in building barracks the chief cause, National Guardsmen in many parts of the U. S. got a month's respite from the rigors of military training.

The new date announced from Washington was February 3, and on this day the army hopes to start many thousands of guardsmen off on their year of intensive military schooling.

The lag in sending them out left a handful (relatively speaking) of draftees, most of them volunteers, scattered throughout the nation's camps. On them the regulars were cutting their training teeth, getting into the stride that they hope will develop a routine for the hundreds of thousands yet to come.

FOREIGN JOTTINGS:

Vichy, France—Mrs. Elizabeth Deegan, state department employee, was freed after being detained by the Nazis five days, charged with aiding British officers to escape France after the collapse.

London—Mr. and Mrs. Paul C. Chamberlain, he the son of the late governor of South Carolina, were killed in a bomb blast. Chamberlain, an artillery officer in World War I, elected to make his home in England after the war. He was a member of the Home Guard.

Athens—The body of a headless aviator on the Salonika road wearing an Italian uniform on the breast of which there were decorations of an unusual number gave rise to the story that Bruno Mussolini, son of Il Duce, had been killed. Rome denied the story, saying Bruno was safe at an air base in southern Italy.

Champ Recruiter

NEW YORK.—Called the champion recruiter of North America, this winsome young lady, Miss Elaine Basset, is the original of the Canadian Join-the-Army posters, where her face did such a good job that it now has been selected to perform a like service for Uncle Sam.

HIGHLIGHTS . . . in the week's news

Baltimore—The new Martin B-26, latest American medium bomber, underwent test flights, made around 400 miles an hour, landed at 123 miles, and was able to stop on the field O. K. Army pilots hailed it as a "bomber's dream." One said that if its brakes were shot away it would roll more than two miles against the wind before it would stop.

Istanbul—Dwarfed in the larger tragedy of Europe, came the story of more than 200 Jewish refugees from Central Europe who had paid $750 each passage money on a 100-ton wooden ship on the guarantee that they would be landed in Palestine, being capsized and drowned in the sea of Marmara. The captain, a White Russian, was saved.

Berlin—The ministry of agriculture claimed the present allowance of fat (butter, margarine and other edible fats) is 10 ounces per person per week as against 4½ ounces during the World War I.

Hoboken—Fire destroyed a million-dollar defense plant, engaged in making unreported appliances needed by U. S. naval vessels.

Washington—The government sought $500,000,000 at the lowest rate of interest ever to be paid on a loan. On the first day, it was oversubscribed eight times, more than $4,000,000,000 being offered for the certificates.

Kebe, Japan—Warnings by the Japanese press that it's going to be a long war were seen as shaking the confidence of the Nipponese in the power of at least the Italian end of the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo Axis.

Washington—The total number of draftees to be called in January will average about twice the number in the first call, it was estimated.

THEY SAY—

Paul W. Litchfield, President, Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company:

"Inherently, we Americans are a dynamic people. We will not long tolerate the status quo nor accept the philosophy of defeat. The times call for harder work—not easier; more thrift instead of extravagance—and cooperation in place of discord. We need to renew our faith, hope and courage; we must forsake the allure of glittering sophistry for the guiding star of good old American common sense. As far as the national emergency is concerned, I have the deep conviction that the production people of this country yield to no class in the abundance and sincerity of their patriotism. They ask merely the chance to get busy. American industry can and will turn out the tanks, guns, planes, ships, trucks and powder to such quantities as to insure this land against any peril from any quarter."

Thomas J. Watson, President, International Business Machines Corporation:

"We in the United States of America, are blessed with unusual advantages and opportunities. As a democratic people we may honestly and properly differ with one another at many points. But, in the final analysis, as a nation we have a heritage and a tradition which bind us together, regardless of creed or color, origin or position. And this heritage and tradition of a democratic people are worth working for."

"... There is all the more reason for the surviving free peoples to keep their eyes open when new assurances come from Berlin, Rome or Tokyo. Whoever imagines that Hitler's 'new order' offers any basis for peace is shutting his eyes as disastrously as the Poles and Norwegians, the Dutch and Belgians, the French and British who once trusted in his promises... No amount of planes and guns and tanks will defend us unless awareness goes constantly with them."

The New York Times.

Robert L. Lund, Executive Vice President, Lambert Pharmaceutical Company: "The majority of the great inventions have been made here in the United States. Almost a score of new world industries have arisen since the beginning of this century, revolutionary in the changes they have brought to human life. Why is it the amazing fact that the inventions leading to every one of these great industries have been made in our own country? The answer, you well know, lies in our institutions and particularly in that important one among them the patent system."

Raoul E. Desvernine, President Crucible Steel Company: "Business and government have separate and distinct functions and to insure coordination of their respective functions, each must stay on its own field of activity and within the limits of its own power. This is essential to any cooperative and unified action."
